ABSTRACT

This project aimed to advance the knowledge of the Hult Center's current audiences and the local market, based on the analysis of the previous ticket sales trends. Understanding of the audiences is a crucial basis for arts organizations to strategically plan their activities. The literature reviewed for this project includes issues in audience research and audience development. Taking an audience research initiative at the local level, this project analyzed ticket sales records of the Hult Center for the Performing Arts from 1994 to August 2002. The analysis presents statistics of (1) the local audiences' attendance behavior by type of performances, show date and time, and ticket price, and (2) overall presentation patterns of different types of promoters.

CHAPTER 1

INTRODUCTION

Purpose of the Project

The purpose of this project was to advance the knowledge of the Hult Center's current audiences and the local market, based on the analysis of the previous ticket sales trends. This project analyzed ticket sales records of the Hult Center for the Performing Arts in the past 8 years from 1994 to August 2002. The intent of this analysis was to (1) understand the current audiences' behavior toward the performances presented at the Hult Center and to (2) examine overall presentation patterns of different types of promoters and their capacities in various disciplines. The analysis resulted in findings that addressed the local audiences' preferences by type of performances, show date and time, and ticket price.

Statement of the Problem

The size and shape of the market for the performing arts has changed over time reflecting shifts in demand that are stimulated by social, demographic, and economic trends in society (McCarthy, Brooks, Lowell, & Zakaras, 2001). Arts organizations should constantly learn about their current audiences in order to be responsive to the ever-changing market. Audiences' attendance patterns for the live performing arts have changed rapidly in recent years (McCarthy et al., 2001), and audience research has become more important to performing arts presenters who want to develop their audiences and attract potential markets.

The Hult Center for the Performing Arts is the major performing arts venue in Eugene, Oregon. Since 1982, The Hult Center has presented various local and non-local performing arts productions, along with nine resident companies, commercial promoters, and community organizations. The Hult Center conducts surveys for each of the events it presents and several selected events presented by other promoters. The survey is designed to measure the audiences' satisfaction level and collect basic information about the audience composition such as income level, ethnicity, gender, and age. However, the survey is limited to a small portion of the events presented at the Hult Center. From the survey data, it is difficult to measure how the audiences' attendance patterns and their preference vary between different types of performances. Also, there has not been any analysis that comprises all types of promoters – resident companies, commercial promoters, community organizations, and the Hult Center – and assess their different appeals to the local audiences. To better understand the current local audiences and the market trends, there needs to be an inclusive analysis that addresses the audiences' behavior toward all performances presented at the Hult Center in the recent years.

Background of the Project

“Audiences are...the customers for the arts form and the raison d'être of the arts organizations” (Hill, E., O’Sullivan, C., & O’Sullivan, T., 2000, p. 50). It is essential for any type of arts organization to understand their audiences. Audience research is given credit for stimulating institutional thinking about audience composition, marketing and audience development (Dimaggio, 1978). Audience research provides arts organizations with a profound understanding of the audiences' perceptions, needs, and wants (Kotler & Scheff, 1997). Audience research enables arts organizations to strategically plan their activities and effectively respond to the market.

The two major audience studies most frequently referred to by arts managers are the Survey of Public Participation in the Arts (SPPA) of the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) and Louis Harris' surveys conducted for Americans for the Arts. These surveys provide statistics of the audiences' socio-demographic characteristics and attendance rates at the nationwide level. Although performing arts organizations may benefit from these generic audience studies, they need to conduct their own audience research to understand particular local audiences they serve. Different demographic populations have different purchasing patterns and expectations (Riley, 1999), and dynamic forces shape different demand and attendance patterns in each community (AMS Planning & Research Corp., 1996). As audiences are becoming more diverse and distinctive, region-specific and discipline-specific audience studies are found more applicable and useful. Concurrently, the importance of audience research at the local level has been greatly emphasized in audience development (Connolly & Cady, 2001). Recent audience development initiatives focus on engaging people in the local communities and creating sustainable relationships. In this context, comprehensive audience research at the local level has evolved into an essential audience development planning strategy for every arts organization.

Limitations and Delimitations

- This analysis examined a few variables within many factors that influence audience behavior. The selected variables included preferences by type of performances, show date and time, and ticket price.
- Data used were the Hult Center's ticket sales records from 1994 to August 2002 that had been electronically collected by the ticket office.
- Although the researcher attempted to avoid biases (see chapter 3. Methodology for detail), unique circumstances in which each event occurred and its innate characteristics might still have influenced the data and aggregately skewed the results.

Definitions of Terms

- Promoters: Individuals or organizations that present performing arts productions. Each event promoter is responsible for booking, marketing, funding, and all other management aspects of its presentation. In this document, the promoters who use the Hult Center for their presentation venue are categorized into the following four types:
 - a. Resident companies: Promoters that are non-profit organizations, located in Eugene, Oregon, that present their productions primarily at the Hult Center on a regular season basis. Currently there are nine resident companies: Eugene Opera, Eugene Ballet Company (EBC), Eugene Concert Choir (ECC), Eugene Symphony Orchestra (ESO), Oregon Bach Festival (OBF), Oregon

Festival of American Music (OFAM), Oregon Mozart Player (OMP); Dance Theatre of Oregon (DTO); and Willamette Repertory Theatre (WRT).

- b. Commercial promoters: For-profit organizations that feature live performing arts productions.
- c. Community organizations: Individuals, groups of individuals, non-profit institutions, or voluntary organizations, located in Eugene, Oregon, that present performing arts productions occasionally or irregularly without a season plan.
- d. Hult Presents: The Hult Center's own presentations programmed by its staff.

Significance of the Project

This project provided a statistical analysis of the audiences' behavior and their preferences toward the performances presented at the Hult Center. This project advanced the knowledge of the Hult Center's current audiences and the local market, which will aid the Hult Center's decision-making process regarding programming, booking, ticket pricing, and audience development planning.

This project was the first formal analysis that comprised all types of promoters who use the Hult Center for their presentation venue. This analysis enabled the Hult Center to estimate presentation patterns of the promoters in different sectors –non-profit, commercial, and volunteer– and their capacities in the local market. The resident companies and other promoters may also benefit from the findings of this project in appealing to the Hult Center's local audiences.

The initiative and the methods of this project also set an example and guidelines for other performing arts organizations. Performing arts facilities similar to the Hult Center and promoters who have presented their productions at a particular venue over years may use this study as a basis to conduct an audience analysis using their own ticket sales records.

CHAPTER 2

LITERATURE REVIEW

Introduction

The purpose of this project was to understand the Hult Center's current audiences and the local market based on the analysis of the previous ticket sales trends. This project examined the audiences' behavior, preferences, and their attendance patterns by several consumer decision-making variables. The purpose of this literature review was to (1) determine the configuration of this study within the broader scope of audience research, i.e., to reflect the foundation of relevant studies that enabled this project, and to (2) frame reliable statistical analysis methods for using secondary data.

Databases used for the literature review include the University of Oregon's Janus catalogue; ORBIS Union catalogue; and OCLC FirstSearch databases, primarily WorldCat, ArticleFirst, and ArtsAbstract. In addition, following specialized research publication indexes and catalogues were used: Association of Performing Arts Presenters' Inside Arts Index; The John S. and James L. Knight Foundation's BOOKSHELF; Arts4AllPeople Research & Resources Directory; RAND publications catalogue; and the Americans for the Arts publications catalogue. Internet engines such as Yahoo, Google, and Altavista were also used to obtain online resources.

Keyword and subject search terms to find related literature to this project included: arts audience; arts surveys; arts participation; cultural participation; audience research; audience development; performing arts; arts programming; arts marketing; ticket pricing; secondary data; secondary analysis; secondary research; research methodology; research design; and statistics.

Audience Research

1. Understanding of the Audience

Arts organizations must learn about their audiences (Dimaggio, 1978).

Audiences are the customers of the arts products (Hill, E., O'Sullivan, C., & O'Sullivan, T., 2000), and they represent the community that an arts organization serves (Keens & Rhodes, 1989). To be responsive to the market and to serve the wider range of public, an arts organization's decisions on its activities should be made upon the understanding of the audience (Dimaggio, 1978).

From the customer-centered management perspective, audiences are defined as the consumers of the cultural industry (Colbert, 2001; Hill, E., O'Sullivan, C., & O'Sullivan, T., 2000; Kotler & Scheff, 1997). Consumers express needs, which a cultural enterprise seeks to meet by its products (Colbert, 2001). In other words, audiences determine the market and create the demand of the arts products.

"Because the consumer is central, the management must have profound understanding of consumer perceptions, needs, and wants" (Kotler & Scheff, 1997, p. 40). Thus, a proactive customer-centered arts organization relies heavily on audience research (Kotler & Scheff, 1997).

In audience development, audience research is perceived as a pivotal step in the planning process. Audience development is a complex endeavor to build and sustain the audience (Connolly & Cady, 2001). Through planning and comprehensive implementations that include programming, marketing, and institutional strategies, audience development aims at:

- to diversify participation – i.e., attract new markets;
- to broaden participation – i.e., attract new members from existing markets;
- and to deepen participation – i.e., increase the level of involvement of participation (McCarthy & Jinnett, 2001; Connolly & Cady, 2001).

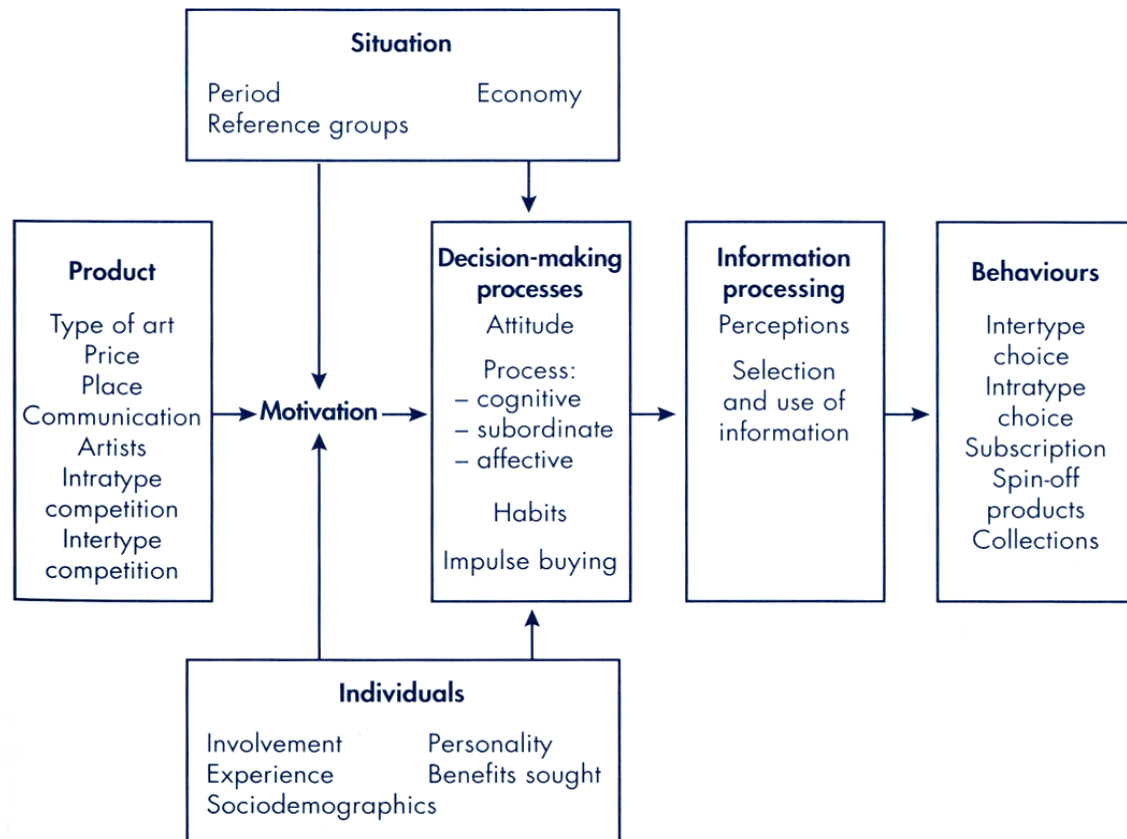

To succeed in these goals, it is essential to assess the current audiences. As Connolly & Cady (2001) point out, “A prerequisite for an art organization beginning audience development work is a solid understanding of its audiences” (p. 18).

2. Audience Behavior

At the core of audience research is an understanding of the consumer behavior (Kotler & Scheff, 1997). A consumer’s arts attendance decisions are influenced by many internal and external factors. Kotler & Scheff (1997) summarized the factors influencing audience behavior in five categories:

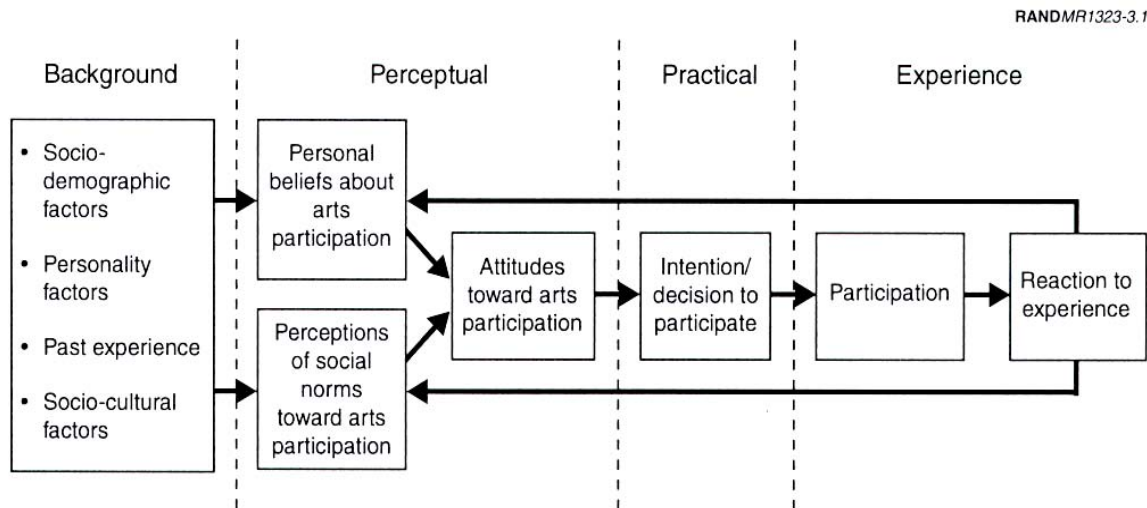

- Microenvironmental Trends: social, political, economic, and technological forces
- Cultural Factors: nationality, subcultures, social class
- Social Factors: reference groups, opinion leaders, innovativeness
- Psychological Factors: personality, beliefs and attitudes, motivation
- Personal Factors: occupation, economic circumstances, lifestyle, family, life-cycle stage

Recent literature on audience behavior focuses on how these factors correlatively affect an individual's cognitive processes of decision-making. According to Colbert (2001), decision-making processes are influenced by three major types of variables: those related directly to consumers themselves, those related to the purchasing context or situation, and those concerning the products being considered. As Figure 1 illustrates, these variables are connected as a triad, which determine an individual's motivation in purchasing a ticket.

RAND Participation Model (McCarthy & Jinnett, 2001, Figure 2) describes different stages an individual goes through in making attendance decisions, which are influenced by various environmental, social, and personal factors.

Colbert's decision-making process theory and RAND Participation Model capture the complex dynamics of the decision-making process and identify how the factors that affect the audience behavior operate. The authors for both books suggest that arts managers should develop targeting strategies to better communicate with the potential audiences at these different decision-making stages.

3. Issues in Audience Research

Applying the market segmentation concept to audience research, audiences are divided into sub-groups of potential customers with similar characteristics, preferences, motivations, and attitudes who are likely to exhibit similar attendance behavior (Audience Insight LLC, 2002; Colbert, 2001; Hill et al., 2000; Kotler & Scheff, 1997). However, most prior audience research has described the audiences primarily in socio-demographic terms. Paul Dimaggio, in his 1978 audience research (Audience studies of the performing arts and museums: A critical review. Research Division report #9. Washington, DC: National Endowment for the Arts), segmented the audience into six characteristics – gender, age, education, occupation, income, and race. Since then, “audience research had concentrated on demographic characteristics and economic impact. Such information can be helpful, but it is not sufficient for defining discrete market segments, understanding how they function, or predicting consumer behavior” (Schreiber, 1985, p. 41). McCarthy & Jinnett (2001) also argued “socio-demographic variables do not appear to be closely correlated to with differences in frequency of participation” (p. 20).

The two major audience studies are the Survey of Public Participation in the Arts (SPPA) of the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) (1987; 1993; 1998) and Louis Harris’ surveys conducted for Americans for the Arts (1987; 1992; 1996). Both surveys have been conducted at regular intervals and provide statistics on audiences’ socio-demographic characteristics and attendance rates at the nationwide level. These data have been also used to describe how attendance patterns changed over time. However, The SPPA data are used more frequently because they contain a broader range of information (McCarthy & Jinnett, 2001). The NEA and Americans for the Arts also publish secondary analyses from these statistics focusing on specific areas such as the economic impact, differences in regions and disciplines, baby-boomers, and particular ethnic groups. Yet, in an attempt to understand the audience behavior, problems of these major audience research data are noted by recent RAND publications (McCarthy & Jinnett, 2001; McCarthy, Brooks, Lowell, & Zakaras, 2001) as follows:

- The data shows that the education factor highly affects the attendance rates, but what drives the education effect is unclear.
- The findings for other socio-demographic factors are altogether ambiguous once education is controlled for.
- The distribution of participation is highly skewed: a relatively small percentage of the population accounts for the vast majority of the total arts attendance.
- It is impossible to estimate how participation rates vary among the commercial, nonprofit, and volunteer sectors.
- The most recent (1997) SPPA data is less reliable than the earlier data due to changes in survey procedures and much higher refusal rate.

4. Issues in Audience Development

“Arts policy appears to be shifting its focus from influencing the supply quality of the arts to increasing the public access to and experiences with the arts” (McCarthy & Jinnett, 2001, p. xi). In light of this, audience development initiatives at the local level have been highly encouraged and supported in the recent years.

Audience Development is reaching and engaging people in local communities by increasing the number of types of people who participate in arts activities, or deepening and existing audience's level of participation. It includes serving both new audiences and the present audiences more deeply. Through the audience-building process, arts organizations forge bonds between individuals and institutions to help create communities that are engaged with the arts. To ensure that these communities grow and remain dynamic, the organizations in these communities must deliberately seek to address the needs, issues, and concerns relevant to the people of the community (Connolly & Cady, 2001, p. 8).

From the late 1990's, Wallace-Reader's Digest Funds has sponsored many local arts institutions' audience development initiatives through Community Partnerships for Cultural Participation Program (CPCP) and Leadership and Excellence in Audience Development (LEAD). Wallace-Reader's Digest Funds also commissioned RAND and the Association of the Performing Arts Presenters for their audience development research and publications. These writings focus on providing resources, frameworks, methods, guidelines, and practical case studies that enable local arts institutions to conduct their own audience research and audience development activities.

Terminology has also changed. The term audience development is now more commonly used than audience building to avoid the implication that the endeavor was only concerned with increasing the size of the audience. Acknowledging the activeness of the audience and the community engagement, cultural participation has been used more frequently than attendance (Connolly & Cady, 2001).

Determining Analysis Methods

This project presented a statistical analysis utilizing the secondary data provided by the Hult Center's ticket office. The relevant literature review on research methodology for this project was focused on the framework of using secondary data and techniques of statistics that are applicable to the analysis.

1. Secondary Data Analysis

Analysis using secondary data is an applied research methodology for social science and industrial business marketing. Secondary analysis refers to an analytic research using existing data that are collected by others (Stewart & Kamins, 1993). Secondary analysis presents interpretation of the extant data (Hakim, 1982).

Secondary analyses will thus include studies presenting more condensed reports (such as social area analysis based on selected social indicators); more detailed reports (offering additional detail on the same topic); reports which focus on a particular sub-topic... ; reports angled toward particular policy issue or question; analyses based on a conceptual frameworks or theory not applied to the original analysis; and reanalyses which take advantage of more sophisticated analytic techniques to test hypotheses and answer questions in a more comprehensive and succinct manner... (Hakim, 1982, p. 1) .

Secondary analysis saves time and costs in data collection (Bowering, 1984). Patzer (1995) also notes that “[the] advantage of using secondary data translate into substantial benefits of efficiency and effectiveness” (p. 18). It is especially true in business marketing research, which aims at quick application to the market demand. The value of using secondary data in marketing research is increasing for its responsiveness and efficiency (Patzer, 1995).

However, “secondary analysis has its own problems to contend with” (Bowering, 1984, p. 2). The disadvantage of using secondary data is a lack of control, which leads to low relevance and accuracy (Patzer, 1995). To present a reliable and valid secondary data analysis, the researcher should examine the data source according to its recency and credibility. “It is important to evaluate carefully the information presented, to weigh potential biases, and to adopt an attitude of healthy skepticism” (Stewart & Kamins, 1993, p. 31).

2. Statistical Methods and Techniques for Analyzing Quantitative Data

Quantitative research relies on numbers in data collection, measurement, and interpretation. “Statistics are methods of organizing and analyzing quantitative data” (McMillan & Schumacher, 2001, p. 206). Statistics are tools that help the researcher organize and interpret numbers derived from measuring variables.

Quantitative researchers identify one or a few variables that they intend to study and then collect data specifically related to those variables.

Specific methods of measuring each variable are identified and developed, with attention to the validity and reliability of the measurement instruments (Leedy & Ormrod, 2001, p. 102).

The two broad categories of statistical techniques are descriptive and inferential. Descriptive statistics are used to describe how different variables within the data are correlated with one another. “The use of descriptive statistics is the most fundamental way to summarize data, and it is indispensable in interpreting the result of quantitative research” (McMillan & Schumacher, 2001, p. 207).

Whereas descriptive statistics summarize general characteristics of the data, “inferential statistics help the researcher make decisions about the data” (Leedy & Ormrod, 2001, p. 33). Inferential statistics allow researchers to draw conclusions about large population by collecting data on a relatively small sample (Leedy & Ormrod, 2001). The main function of inferential statistics is to estimate or predict population parameters. Inferential statistics are also the principles and techniques that allow researchers to generalize their findings beyond the actual data (Schuyler, 2000). However, errors in sampling, measurement, and hypothesis must be estimated and acknowledged.

The following concepts and principles in quantitative research and statistics were applied to the methodology for this project.

Credibility. “Credibility refers to the extent to which the results approximate reality and are judged to be trustworthy and reasonable. Credibility is enhanced when the research design takes into account potential sources of error that may undermine the quality of the research and may distort the findings” (McMillan & Schumacher, 2001, p. 166).

Bias: “bias is any influence, condition, or set of condition that singly or together distorts the data” (Leedy & Ormrod, 2001, p. 221).

Reliability. “Reliability refers to the consistency of measurement” (McMillan & Schumacher, 2001, p. 244). Reliability determines “the extent to which measurement are free from error” (McMillan & Schumacher, 2001, p. 244).

Validity. Validity refers to the accuracy of measurement (Schuyler, 2000). “The validity of a measurement instrument is the extent to which the instrument measures what is supposed to measure” (Leedy & Ormrod, 2001, p. 98).

CHAPTER 3

METHODOLOGY

The purpose of this project was to understand the audiences' behavior and attendance patterns toward the performances presented at the Hult Center. The data source was the Hult Center's ticket sales records from 1994 to August 2002, electronically collected by the ticket office. This project employed statistics to organize the quantitative data and to analyze (1) the audiences' preferences by type of performances, show date and time, and ticket price, and (2) overall presentation patterns of different types of promoters in various disciplines. This chapter will explain the process of and methods used for the statistical analysis.

Data Collection

This project used secondary data, the Hult Center's ticket sales records. The Hult Center's ticket office manager converted their ticket sales records from 1994 to August 2002 to a MS Excel spreadsheet upon the researcher's request. The credibility of the secondary data was tested for the accuracy using the Hult Center's information system.

In order to adjust the raw data for the purpose of this project, the researcher designed classifications of genres, sub-genres, and types of the promoters. For proper classification, the researcher consulted with the ticket office manager on the applicability of the categories and the assortment of each data.

One thousand ninety eight (1098) events out of 1274 were verified and qualified as objects of the analysis. Events that were not open to general public or drew only a certain group of public, for example, invitation gala events, conferences, and particular high school concerts, were excluded from the dataset through the filtering process. Free performances and two movie events were also removed from the analysis.

Organizing the Data

Data were clustered by variables associated with the audiences' attendance patterns and preferences: genre, sub-genre, type of promoters, show date and time, and type of auditorium.

- 1098 events were categorized into eight genres: classical music, contemporary music, dance, theatre, musical, opera, entertainment, and lecture. Within each genre, each data was sorted by sub-genres (Figure 3).

- Each event promoter was classified into one of the four types of promoters: Resident company, commercial promoter, community organization, or the Hult Presents.
- Show date and time information already existed in the raw data.
- Silva Hall and Soreng Theater were always discussed separately as they are non-comparable parameters in capacity. The maximum capacity of Silva Hall is 2500 whereas that of Soreng Theater is 500.

Statistical Analysis

The average number of tickets sold and the average ticket price sold were sought from the data clustered by the variables. The formulas used to obtain the results are as follows:

- Average number of tickets sold = $\sum (\text{Number of tickets sold for each event}) / \text{Number of events}$
- Average ticket price sold = $\sum (\text{Gross revenue of each event} / \text{Number of tickets sold for each event}) / \text{Number of events}$

While the primary method for analyzing the data was descriptive statistics, I also partially adopted inferential statistics. Descriptive statistics were used by and large to measure the data clustered by the variables. Inferential statistics were used to separate and discard particular data that contained a bias, i. e., that skewed the average at a large scale, for example, a famous soloist concert. Separation and exclusion of such data was intended to enhance the credibility of the analysis and findings. Information about the excluded data was noted at every incident.

Results were sought in order of genre, sub-genre, type of promoter, and show data and time. The show date and time variable was applied secondarily to the clusters by sub-genre, and the results were sought from selected large data clusters. Results from insufficient samples were considered null and either noted or discarded.

RESULT

The purpose of this project was to understand the Hult Center's current audiences' behavior and the local market trend. This project analyzed ticket sales records of the Hult Center for the Performing Arts from 1994 to August 2002. The analysis resulted in findings of (1) the audiences' attendance patterns by type of performances, show date and time, and ticket price, and (2) overall presentation and ticket sales patterns of four different types of promoters. This chapter will present the results of the statistical analysis. A snapshot overview of ticket sales patterns for a total of 1098 events will be followed by details for each genre: classical music, dance, contemporary music, theatre, musical, opera, entertainment, and lecture. Each section begins with the number of events by sub-genre and promoter, followed by the average number of tickets sold and the average ticket price sold by the sub-genre, promoter, and show date and time.

CHAPTER 5

SUMMARY AND CONCLUSION

The purpose of this project was to advance the knowledge of the Hult Center's current audiences and the local market. Understanding of the audience is a critical basis for arts organizations to strategically plan their activities. Audiences are becoming more diverse and distinctive, thus audience research at the local level has gained greater importance in the recent years. Arts organization should understand the needs of the particular communities they serve. This project investigated the Hult Center's current audience's behavior through the statistical analysis of the previous ticket sales records. The analysis resulted in findings that addressed the local audiences' attendance patterns and preferences by type of performances, show date and time, and ticket price. This understanding will facilitate future discussions among the professional staff at the Hult Center making decisions about programming, marketing, booking, ticket pricing, and audience development planning. This project also examined overall presentation patterns of different types of promoters, which enabled the Hult Center to estimate the promoters' capacities in the local market.

Summary of Key Findings and Recommendations

- Resident companies promoted 54% of the total events.
- Resident companies promoted more than 85% of the classical music, opera, ballet, and play theatre events.

- Commercial promoters promoted 28% of the total events.
- Commercial promoters presented most of the musicals, rock, pop, and country music events, tap and world dances, and comedy theatres.
- Community organizations promoted 11% of the total event.
- Community organizations promoted most of their events in Soreng Theater, and major genres they promoted were modern dance, contemporary music, and family theatre.
- Hult Presents were 7% of the total events.
- In general, commercial promoters sold the most, and community organizations sold the least.
- Average ticket price sold for events in Silva Hall was $25.50, and that at Soreng Theater was $15.00.
- While family events sold the least, Sunday matinees sold 1.7–2 times more than Saturday matinees.
- Eugene Ballet Company's modern ballet sold much less than classical ballet. However, the Hult Center's modern ballet and foreign ballet promotions sold as much as the resident company's classical ballet. Ballet audiences seem to trust the resident company in classical ballet repertoires but also have the need for "something different" in modern ballet and other ballet repertoires.
- The classical ballet audience is not much influenced by show day and time. However, Saturday evening and Sunday matinee sold the most.
- The modern ballet audience prefers Saturday evenings to Sunday matinees.

- Modern dance sold about 50% of the seats in both Silva Hall and Soreng Theater.
- Weekday ticket sales for modern dance events were remarkably low except for Thursdays. It is recommended not to book a modern dance event on weekdays.
- Audiences for new age, gospel, folk, and jazz in the region seem to be small, and it is recommended to use Soreng Theater for those genres.
- For Jazz, Saturday evening sold the most in Silva but the least in Soreng. Thursday evening was preferred to Friday evening in both auditoriums for Jazz events.
- Rock concerts sold the most on both Friday evenings and Saturday, and Sunday events sold over 80% of the seats. However, weekday ticket sales varied much with each event.
- Avoid booking weekdays for theatre events. Weekday ticket sales for comedy theatre in Silva Hall were only 65% of weekend sales. For play events in Soreng Theater, earlier weekday evenings and Saturday matinees sold only half of Friday and Saturday evenings.
- Musical events sold more on weekdays than on weekends.

Areas for Further Research

This project analyzed the ticket sales records from 1994 to August 2002.

Using the methodology and the results of this research, further investigation can be made on tracing changes of the audience's behavior over time. One may divide the dataset organized for this study into two periods, for example, from 1994 to 1998 and from 1999 to 2002, and compare the audiences' attendance patterns between the years. By doing so, the researcher will be able to note changes in audience behavior over time and inquire about more recent trends. Taking into account changes in the economy and different programming strategies adopted by the Hult Center during the time, distinctions between the two periods may also identify how those situational factors have influenced the local audience's behavior. Using the methods employed by this project, the Hult Center would be able to conduct a similar ticket sales analysis a few years later and compare the new results with the results of this project. Moreover, conducting the analysis at a regular interval will allow the Hult Center to continually observe the changes of audience's behavior over time and predict future trend. Finally, integrating the findings of this project with the audience survey results will assist the Hult Center in obtaining a more detailed audience profile and better segmentation of the local market.
